Excerpt: . . . and the development of a complex ritual, the shrine was divided into a number of chambers, the innermost of which, the sekos, enclosed the efligy or symbol of the god. The adjacent chambers were planned to contain the treasures of the sanctuary and in certain instances to be used in carrying out the intricate ceremonies of initiation into the secrets of the priesthood. The hypostyle hall was really a great ceremonial chamber. The title employed in the hieroglyphic inscriptions, the Hall of Appearance, clearly indicates its intention. Entrance to the sekos portion of the edifice was restricted to the superior priests and the King. At the celebration of religious rites the inferior priests would await the appearance of the emblem, a statue of the god, in the hall of the columns. In the earlier temples this feature was of modest size. (Fig. 8.)...
