Next take perfectly clean, carded cotton, which has been previously boiled for an hour or so in a weak solution of carbonate of soda in water, and afterwards thoroughly dried. Turn on the gas and stir the mixture with the bulb of the thermometer, until the temperature of the mixture reaches about 150 F., at which point it must be carefully maintained during the subsequent operation. Now introduce about 125 grains of the cotton in little tufts, and stir them thoroughly about in the mixture for about twelve or fourteen minutes. Throw the contents of the dish into a large tank of running water (the acid being of no further use), and with the hands rapidly agitate the cotton about for five or ten minutes, after which the cotton may be suffered to...
